Do you agree that the idea of "social equality" is an unrealistic expectation? Why/why not?

Social equality is a social term spoken all over the world. However, this type of equality may differ due to some circumstances. Equality might be mentioned when opportunity among people has been provided. These opportunities might be about financial or social and cultural or political. But when looking at the situation of todays' people, it can be said that there is no social equality in the modern world because of the fact that all people do not have same opportunities in life. Social equality is unrealistic expectation is discussed with three cases. These three main cases are about economic disparity, class inequality and gender discrimination; which all of these have critical points.

Social Inequality with Economic Disparity

The case for social inequality with economic disparity can be seen when economic differences become clearer. Das M. and Das S.K. (2013) argues following:

> Economic growth is an essential component of development, but it is not enough, as reductions in poverty and inequality are equally important. Development policies revolve around the issues related to poverty and inequality, and many of these policies are redistributive in nature. Many countries, developed and developing, have progressive income and wealth taxes, as well as an income transfer mechanism to transfer income from the above-average to below-average earners to reduce income disparities. (p.10)

When income inequality is determined in some countries, such studies are being conducted. If these studies are a major factor in eliminating the inequality, the difference between the two revenues is increasing again.

A good example for economic disparity is for difference between agricultural and industrial. The governments make adjustments for urban life. Xue (2014) explains that amid frenetic advancement of industrialization and urbanization, the government began implementing differential prices where industrial goods were set with high prices and agricultural goods with low prices, in order to support industrialization and guarantee the food supply for urban residents (p.5-6). The governments make this works for cities, at the same time, agricultural products lose their price thus there is an economic disparity between people in towns and in village due to with industrialization, agricultural products lose price.

In this context, the economic situation causes inequality among people. In villages and towns, this situation might be reduced or eliminated by specific arrangements like agricultural products can be sold with reel price. Despite take lots of time, if these arrangements do not happen, there will be bigger problems in the name of social equality.

Social Inequality with Gender Discrimination

The next critical area for social inequality is gender discrimination with economic factors. Healey (2014) comments following:

> Increases in income-earning opportunities for women do not mean they have secure, decent jobs. Nor does it mean they are on an equal footing with men. In fact, the data suggest that women in developing regions are more likely than men to work as contributing family workers - on farms or other family business enterprises or as own account workers - with little or no financial security or social benefits. (p.7)

If women have same job opportunities like man, these jobs could not be safe for women because in all of work area women have been exposed to discrimination. Tsesis (2012) reports that female slaves suffered unique hardships, being exploited for both labor and reproductivity. While black women experienced the unique horrors of hereditary servitude, women of all races were legally and domestically prohibited from enjoying equality with men (p. 1643). These difficulties caused bad effects on women's living rights. Despite these effects being eliminated, gender discrimination has prevented it.

These statements specify that social inequality occur with gender discrimination and might be dangerous for people as long as the opportunities given to men and women. At the same time, if they do not have equality in this period in which they need a stable future, such as slavery, inequality and injustice might be arisen again.

Social Inequality with Class Discrimination

Class discrimination is also critical point for human life which is about social inequality. In generally, social class, speech and life style might be about class discrimination. Gaine and George (1998) argue that in some obvious respects social class cannot be 'seen' in the way that race and gender can it is much less easy to recognize someone's social class on sight (p. 29). Race and gender are not useful to understand class. Nevertheless, social class, speech and life style do not specify class discrimination in these days for social equality, but in the past time, these are very critical cases for social inequality because equality might be evaluated in terms of clothing and speech in that time is understandable these past time.

Power and status might be critical point for social inequality with class discrimination. Highly educated people might have a better position than uneducated people around the world. These positions offer people power and status. But, people who do not get quality education cannot have power and status. These situation reveals class discrimination between people in terms of power and status.

Conclusion

After these three points analyzing effectively, we can express that social equality is an unrealistic expectation because of some cases which are economic, class and gender reasons. This situation seems to affect individual, but it affects all of the societies. If the societies do not want to overcome this inequality, they lose their respect for themselves step by step because of the fact that there might be differences between people.
